*Turning and turning each one's road in
The life we cannot lead the life we want
Things fall apart; the centre can hold
More than it ever could upon the world*

W.B. Yeats: The Second Coming

But I belong to a very fortunate generation – when I was growing up – it was easy especially if you lived in a village – to see these old ways of life. I was particularly interested in listening to the village old people talked and the festivals were still observed, may be not in the same force, but they were still there.
